CORINE BARENDREGT

GPS
Shapes that have a simplicity and rawness are my inspiration. In the paintings this may appear in the shape of a piece of bread, the inside of a pomegranate or even a fire hose reel. The same simplicity is the driving force behind the photographs, made by artist Lucius Pax, photographer Sanna van Renesse and myself. Together we regularly visit vacant spaces to inspire us. Our goal is to capture imagery often altered by means of paper or taped lines to offer a different perspective; the urban landscape helps form the foundation and inspiration for the artwork which later emerges. In my ceramic works, I look for interesting shapes and structures that are mainly found in outdoor areas. This can be a metal construction, an air outlet or a drainage. The image removed from its natural environment, will once more re-appear in the finished work. Method: I color the prints with engobe before enameling them. On the back of the tiles the actual satellite tracking coordinates (GPS) have also been engraved. Those who are able to follow the creative path I have chosen (for this series) may too become more aware of the hidden layers of beauty to be found in even the most insignificant everyday objects to be found in perhaps the least attractive corners of our world.
