DANA LAMONDA

Dana LaMonda is a photographer and an artist who manages to capture images that only she is able to find through her very personal and upright way of working.

Dana LaMonda is a photographer and an artist who manages to capture images that only she is able to find through her very personal and upright way of working. In her work and projects of the recent years she has submerged herself in a remarkable way into the social groups she is seeking to portray. A wonderful example can be found in a recent project, The Velvet Zone, where she became part of the 'family' of a brothel. This form of human research, intensely participatory and involving a great deal of sympathizing in the project matter, is essential for Dana LaMonda in creating a natural atmosphere where her subjects and their respective environment are released of any reserve. In this way it is not the décor or the setting which is captured or portrayed for the outside world, but the unfiltered inner workings of an unusual biotope. Dana LaMonda has a unique approach to her work which gives it the unmistakable Dana brand. Most of all though, it is her candid frankness and sincere curiosity in people with which she is able to reveal social environments to the viewer that would normally remain undeniably closed. Dana LaMonda creates opportunities for us to enter and glance into worlds through the trust and confidence she herself has gained. She does so without in any way abashing that trust. Her work radiates from the inside out and vice versa. Marie Jeanne de Rooij December 2017

- 2017 "The Velvet Zone 2017," exposition out of nomination; Van Ommeren- de Voogt price Hardenbergzaal, Pulchri Studio The Hague, Netherlands Installation, photography, mixed media The Velvet Zone The edges of society, the fringes, the real life, this is what intrigues me and what I look for. Also in abandoned places where experiences which have taken place create a sphere one cannot see, only feel. During my search for the reality of life, I discover a brothel in Amsterdam. While discussing the project I hope to set in motion, the owner says: "Then you need to come and work here, build up trust with the girls. Only then will you be able to understand and draw a map about this life." I work nine months as assistant manager. Trust is established and I begin to photograph the rooms after the deed is accomplished. This is the nerve center of the brothel. I notice my photos contain more than the room alone. They capture the way life in a brothel is lived. As soon as a click is made between the girl and a client, the price paid and the key received, a new reality emerges. For one hour both are transported from daily life into a small isolated intimate space. The sole constant element is the ticking of the clock. When time is up, everything reverts back to the ordinary. Sheets are changed, a skirt is straightened, shoes are put on and life begins anew. It is a surreal world filled with theatrical moments and every time again I am surprised and full of wonder how this occurs. I experience it as a privilege to photograph this world. Everything I look for in my photography is contained in it: abstraction, impressionism, isolation. Although the nights are long, in the early morning when I return home I feel satisfied as I listen to the birds and review the images from the previous night. This in The Velvet World of the night. www.pulchri.nl

2016 Nominated; Van Ommeren- de Voogt Price 2016 Pulchri Studio, Den Haag The Hague, Netherlands Nomination 2016, Van Ommeren-De Voogt price Jury Rapport, Dana LaMonda with her installation Vanishing Point, This work shows a mysterious depth and gives a lonely and abandoned feeling. It draws attention and invites you to walk around it several times. The jury experiences an uncanny feeling, it exudes coldness but is luminous at the same time. The installation is completely aesthetic but agitates your thought process. It evokes questions and that is an important effect of art.
