DIMITRI VAN DEN WITTENBOER

Site-specific participatory Performance

I work with site-specific performance exploring possible varieties of participation and how they can contribute to our society. What excites me about participation is the commitment which is required from the audience. I believe that this makes the work less consumable. In my recent projects, I was researching ritual in the studies of anthropology. I was curious to learn about the participatory quality of ritual performance and experimented with ways to integrate it into my work. Currently, I am interested in public space. I am looking for a performance practice which is embedded in the social world and has a direct effect. The work is produced in a collaborative back and forth between the participants and the artist.

dimitrivandenwittenboer.com The public space is an interplay between various elements including architecture, laws, institutions, mental images and social behaviours. Henri Lefebvre explains that cities do not exist per se but are social products of relations of people and the environment. My performative research specifically looks into possible ways of transforming these relations in the context of the city.

Group | dominance of the written word in our culture. Instead of producing a regular written thesis, he decided to do his graduation thesis in the form of a two-hour theatrical performance. It took place on 8 April 2019 in the Auditorium of the KABK in the attendance of around 25 people. Midway between a modernist theatre play, a workshop and an art performance, the performance was divided into three parts, in which the theories of three avant-garde theatre makers (Antonin Artaud, Jerzy Grotowsky and Augusto Boal) were presented, discussed and demonstrated. Together with two actors, Dimitri managed to raise questions on multiple issues, like the body of the performer, public participation and the political effectiveness of performances. All senses were activated in a total experience, to evoke these questions - seeing, hearing, tasting, touching, smelling. To this end, the auditorium was carefully adjusted. In line with the objective to challenge the dominance of the written word, no audio-visual recordings were made of the performance, nor has the script been made available in a written form. Instead, Dimitri has submitted a list of witnesses and participants in the performance. They can be approached for further information. Their memories document the event. As an example of this mnemonic documentation, Dimitri gave a lesson on 25 April 2019 to the propaedeutic students of the FA department of the KABK, in which he staged the memorising of his performance with his thesis supervisor - the start of an oral narrative. |
