SAM HERSBACH

Figurative, mostly narrative painting, with experiments in sound and metal work

One could see my paintings as photographs / snapshots, or visual cut-outs of a bigger world. The world continues to exist beyond the painting. Into the unknown. The creatures that live within my paintings are more often than not afraid of the 'unknown area' that lays outside of the painting. Other, (generally bigger), creatures live in this outside world. There is an interaction between the in- and outside world of the paintings. Therefore the peripheral areas of the painting are of utmost important. In these areas the creatures crawl in and outside the painting. Some creatures are so big that only one finger could fit within the image. In the work creatures fight for power and self enhancement. In one painting called 'masker pakking' (mask taking/grabbing), a creature finds, choses and takes a new mask to wear. A new mask as a new ego, a new extension of your being. In another painting a group of snakes attempt to hunt down a large foot of an enormous person. Meanwhile a catfish is already attacking some of those snakes. And spears are going towards the catfish. However nothing would matter if a 'too big to imagine' creature would swipe everything out of the painting, with just one movement of the finger. I am also highly interested in technoself studies. Becoming godlike creatures through technology. What is it to be human. What is part of your being, or just a tool? for a text by fabian schöneich: https://www.samhersbach.nl/text-by-fabian-sch oneich / And more texts via: https://www.samhersbach.nl/texts/.

shark-induced cable faults tini mini room Dordrecht, Netherlands Tinimini Room is pleased to present Shark-induced cable faults, a solo exhibition by Sam Hersbach, opening on Saturday 31 May. The title refers to a curious phenomenon in which deep-sea sharks bite into undersea communication cables; cables that carry nearly all data between continents, hidden quietly beneath the ocean's surface. It is an image both absurd and serious, where nature and human technology collide in confusion. This tension between humor and gravity flows through Hersbach's work, which brings together layers of fantasy and reality, digital detritus and historical references, painting and installation. In his compositions, figuration and abstraction intersect through a diverse visual language shaped by memes, medieval symbolism, submarine entanglements, community gatherings, and imaginary creatures. What begins as a casual internet scroll (through articles, videos, or heraldic imagery) may result in a scene where insects attempt to pilot submarines or microscopic figures meet across enormous distances. In these paintings, scale is unstable: one section might zoom in on the one-millimeter level, while elsewhere we drift kilometers away. Nothing is fixed. In this universe, beings step in and out of the canvas, subvert hierarchies, and enter into ongoing research into the unknown, into each other. Hersbach's work has evolved from narrative-driven scenes to painterly encounters where material and process play a central role. He paints with a combination of hard acrylics, soft gouache, and self-made pigments. Some derived from dried flowers gifted after an exhibition, or from ethically sourced dune grass tied to Dutch coastal ecology. By working on raw, untreated canvas and building up in careful layers, Hersbach treats the surface not just as a carrier of image, but as an emotional and physical terrain. Texture becomes essential: from rough to lush, matte to reflective, he integrates wooden planks, metal sheets, and photo transfers into the canvas, forming a layered dialogue of visual languages. Color is used not simply as decoration but as a tool of contradiction and emphasis. A disturbing figure might be rendered in joyful hues, while an element may vanish in nearmonochrome tones. The result is confusion, curiosity, and a sense of layered worlds that resonate with how humans move through various realities: planetary, microbial, digital, and social. Influenced by a wide range of artists, such as Marlene Dumas, and they lived happily ever after Cacao Fabriek eindhoven, Netherlands Under the title "And they lived happily ever after", we introduce contemporary painting in this exhibition through the perspectives of eleven artists, each presenting painting as the most powerful medium of our time. The exhibition was initiated by four Eindhoven-based artists: Aaron van Erp, Aagje Linssen, Jeroen Vrijsen, and Saskia de Marée, working collectively under the name De Eindhovense School. Taking their work as a starting point, curator Manus Groenen (writer, curator, and Head of Education at Museum Boijmans Van Beuningen) invited seven additional contemporary painters: Ide André, Sam Hersbach, Kimball Gunnar Holth, Esther Tielemans, Thijs Segers, Ema Vaneková, and Anouk van Zwieten. Together, these artists pay tribute to painting in all its layers, urgency, and vitality. cacaofabriek.nl/agenda/and-they-lived-happily-everafter Group

Around the hut of Mondriaan Singer Museum Laren, Netherlands EXHIBITION AROUND MONDRIAN'S HUT. 30 years Dooyewaard Foundation. On view from 4 February to 4 May 2025 in the Nardinc Gallery of Singer Laren. "Around Mondrian's Hut" covers the 30 year history of the Dooyewaard Foundation. From the first purchase of the Stipendium studio to the spectacular discovery of Mondrian's studio and Hart Nibbrig's studio, the foundation has been committed to the preservation of historic studios from the artists' villages of Laren and Blaricum. It makes these studios available to selected artists and innovative projects such as the Mondrian Initiative. By creating a new Colony, the Dooyewaard foundation has shown that the Gooi region remains vibrant as a place for inspiring art. The exhibition in Singer Laren shows a selection of work of young talent and more established names from the art world. All were Artist in Residence (for a short or longer working period) in one of the 5 studios in Blaricum. Participating artists: Anouk van Zwieten, Eline Boerma, Emo Verkerk, Hidenori Mitsue, Jan Timmers, Janine van Oene, Jessica Skowroneck, Kim Habers, Marie Reintjes, Marloes Roeper, Nathalie Duivenvoorden, Niek Hendrix, Robin Speijer, Ronald Zuurmond, Sam Hersbach, Sam Reekers, Sam Werkhoven, Stijn Rietman, Tamar Frank, and on location: Thomas Hirschhorn. There will also be a short film clip on view recording the residency of Sophia Al Maria and Emanuele Coccia that gives an insight into life and work in the Colony today.

Fancy Some Friction, Honey? 33 Year Cokkie Snoei Fancy Some Friction, Honey? Rotterdam, Netherlands For over thirty years, Rotterdam gallerist Cokkie Snoei played an important role in the city's artistic climate. Shown at Kunsthal Rotterdam from Saturday 14 October, the exhibition 'Fancy Some Friction, Honey?', presents the work of 33 artists personally selected by Cokkie Snoei and represented by her gallery. The selected works reflect the quirky choices Cokkie has constantly made since the start of her career, her personal views, and the spirit of the times during the various decades. According to Cokkie, art should be funny, bizarre, perhaps even ugly, but never boring or predictable. For 33 years, Cokkie Snoei and her gallery had a major impact on the artistic and cultural climate of Rotterdam and beyond. After working as a copywriter and fundraiser, she established her own art agency in 1985. She started out with a portfolio of twelve Rotterdam artists whose work she wanted to bring to the attention of entrepreneurs in search of high-quality art for their office spaces. Although successful, Cokkie found no satisfaction in this approach. In 1989, she boldly opened an ambitiously set-up gallery in the Rotterdam street Witte de Withstraat, where she was able to operate as a connecting factor and actually help artists get ahead. Against the grain At a time when photography was not yet taken seriously as an artform, Cokkie was the first gallerist in the Netherlands to show work by now internationally renowned artists like Nan Goldin, Claude Cahun, and Larry Clark. Presenting a mix of established and new, unknown artists, she invariably selected bold and outspoken work that ventured beyond the beaten path. Many of these artists reflected the rough edges of society. Her focus was on controversial subjects such as sexuality, gender identity, and power relations. The art had to go against the grain, provoke, and excite, as well as challenge preconceived ideas of what art should be. This is clearly palpable in the exhibition 'Fancy Some Friction, Honey?', which will show photographs, films, drawings, paintings, sculptures, and installations by 33 artists, covering 33 years of Cokkie Snoei's gallery. Artists featured in 'Fancy Some Friction, Honey?' Andres Serrano, Benny Merris, Bert Sissingh, Bianca Sistermans, Boris Mikhailov, C.A. Wertheim, Carolee Schneemann, Claude Cahun, Douglas Kolk, Heike Kati Barath, Jason Fox, Koen Taselaar, Koes Staassen, Larry Clark, Lee Miller, Lily van der Stokker, Madeleine Berkhemer, Markus Selg, Michael Bauer, Nan Goldin www.kunsthal.nl/nl/plan-jebezoek/tentoonstellingen/fancy-some-friction-honey/

2022 Summer show maurits van de laar Gallery The Hague

The Summershow features work by regular and new artists of the gallery. Sam Hersbach (1995) exhibits for the first time, his paintings have intriguing titles like (Hospital) Cleaningservice to fight unbalanced critters, amidst horsemen, or Clumsy catfish hunting a mysterious horse rider. They are boldly painted in flashy colours, presenting figures and animals that loom between dome shaped mountains like in a dream or a hallucination. Besides shows smaller drawings Susanna Inglada (1983) shows a large collaged work: Turning the Tables in which two women are reading and a third writes with the braids of the one above her. By reading and writing they acquire knowledge and shift the balance of power between men and women. Jantien Jongsma (1965) once described her work as a self invented folklore, with lots of details and a subjective use of perspective. She now shows among others works on paper of birds embedded in a lavish natural habitat. Ronald Versloot (1964) made series of new pastels in which he builds up the image with a minimum of lines. In Dip In he creates a rotating movement that starts in the circles where the diver will hit the water. The arch of branches above and blue waves below enhance this movement. Dan Zhu (1985) made new work on paper. In The Lightning she summons up a dreamlike nocturnal world with a giant moth. From its wings tiny lines run ending in orange dots that launch small bolts of lightning. Like seeds spreading new life they invigorate the nightly blue skies. mauritsvandelaar.nl/en/summershow-3/ Group

Stibbe and I have both figurative elements, however Stibbe is more abstract than me, which I really liked because of the fact I just did a show with Ralf Kokke, which is mostly more figurative than my work. In this was I tried to look at abstraction and recognition in my paintings. I was also really nice to do a show with julius stibbe, because we have know each other since art school, but never did show together.
