MADELINE SWAINHART

I wonder what family could look like outside the binary, considering the question ‘Can we all mother?’
Madeline Swainhart is an American born (1997) visual artist and writer. Currently based in The Hague, Netherlands. Swainhart explores representations of queer families through self-portraiture, moving image, and installation. Their practice revolves around research and construction. They research the archetypes of the Mother, the Nuclear Family, and what nurturing looks like while constructing a queered image of those. Swainhart wonders what family could look like outside the binary, considering the question ‘Can we all mother?’ Swainhart’s use of self-portraiture allows them to shift between fantasy and reality and emphasize the expectation of gender roles within domesticity while giving you your own playground of The Home. Their most recent publication Nuking the Nuclear Family can be found in bookstores throughout the Netherlands and New York City. Madeline’s work utilizes the combination of text, image, sound, and textiles to examine the act of nurturing and its role within gender and the home. Their work is for their younger self and all the queer kids like them, an archive in the making. Giving you more options is the way I nurture. Family - Home - Mother - Motherhood - Parenthood - Queer - Domesticity - Care - Nurture - Masculinity technique. Bringing the viewer into the space of The Home. Reimagining families and who they are made up of. Self-portraiture allows me to explore my own gender identity. Helping me to imagine my future as a non-binary parent.

2021 Can they mother me, if I let them? The Hague, Netherlands madelineswainhart.nl/motherhood.html
Can they mother me, if I let them? Comfort comes in many forms. It is both simple and complex. Who gives and who takes? By breaking down the boundaries of where we get comfort and with whom we feel safe; I search for what closeness looks like. I wonder why it is so hard to be vulnerable enough to be cared for. This work is a choreography of intimacy based on dependency and trust. Would you let me hold you?

2021 Grammy's Praying For Me The Hague, Netherlands Grammy’s Praying For Me If a home is where we become. What happens when we don’t fit? I am collecting, digging through the archive of my upbringing. An archive that holds memories I no longer know except in the way I move, in the way I am. With a family that represents something I could never become, I search for an image of what family can look like outside of the binary. With thorough research into the objects, photographs, writings, fabrics, and artworks that are left from my childhood I am drawing parallels between what is found and what is remembered in order to better understand my own relationship to gender and sexuality. I begin to understand what didn't fit right. By knowing what I was shown I can make sense of my inner child. A baby raised a girl, and never grew up to become a woman.

2021 Mother, May I (ask you) The Hague, Netherlands vimeo.com/600728571 password: MOTHER Mother, May I (ask you) A video work directed towards my mother, asking her questions on my upbringing. Using a selection from my family home videos — I look closely at how my parents documented us, and how they raised us. Mom, these are the things I wish I could ask you.
