ALIA LEONARDI

My practice is anchored in the belief that subjectivity is the norm, and there is no pretention to not be. Authenticity is a lie, everything is constructed. I reflect and subvert images and content that already exist, with a focus on the digital. With the believe that intersectional feminism is key to understand and resolve societal issues, I also make. The methodology behind the making is driven by the necessity to take space, to exist and be material. I often use typically and stereotypically “feminine” methods of production.

- 2024 Unseen Amsterdam, Netherlands All artists participated in the research-driven FUTURES residency at the FUTURES Hub in Amsterdam, which fosters experimentation and innovation. The program encourages artists to explore the intersections of photography and installation while creating new frameworks to support emerging artists in their careers. In addition to showcasing these talented photographers, FUTURES will also highlight the work of four recent graduates from the Royal Academy of Art, The Hague (KABK), who participated in the UNFOLDING FUTURES residency at the FUTURES Hub this summer. Projects by Alia Leonardi, Joseph Kennel, Daniel Zduniuk, and Benjamin Morrison will be displayed on the Wall at Unseen, offering a glimpse into the innovative approaches of the next generation of photographic artists.

- 2023 Everthing that Melts is About to Blend De Helena Den Haag, Netherlands Thirteen image-makers from ten countries will be presenting a collective show that will address themes concerning water, colonialism, racism, violence, queer identities, urbanisation, gentrification, time, and the climate crisis. The themes are all questions of politics and they are addressed at different scales. The works will zoom into the human, the non- human, and zoom out to the scale of the city and its institutions, and further to the level of the national and then global, they will also shift back and forth in time. This exhibition is an attempt to create a dialogue with multiple audiences and is an open space to host, welcome, and exchange.

2022 Yolun Dışında Izmir , Turkey How do we move through environments, be they physical or social? How do we navigate the web of affordances created by individuals and objects alike? This constant motion of relating to each other is one that everyone is doing everywhere at every moment. You are doing it right now. And while change desires to be the only constant, we often find ourselves in static moments that shape our experiences. To reflect and constantly re-define one's position within these fixed instances thus becomes a necessity for movement itself. yolundisinda.com/

PUBLICATIONS

2024 Critical Meme Reader III: Breaking the Meme Book The Institute of Network Cultures (Amsterdam) Chloë Arkenbout & Idil Galip Amsterdam, Netherlands networkcultures.org/blog/publication/critical-meme-reader-iii-breaking-the-meme/ When you want to say something about memes, it is impossible to escape having to situate them. What usually happens is that meme makers and thinkers fall back on two definitions: Dawkins (1976), Shifman (2014). How can memes be defined beyond their work in a way that is better suited to our current time? Building on this work – yes of course – but in a way that leaves space for the meme to breathe. Honoring its transgressive everchanging nature, instead of limiting it into a static framework it never chose to be in in the first place. For meme studies to truly theoretically evolve as a field, the meme needs many expanded definitions. The goal of Critical Meme Reader III is to break its definition open with different visions, and to keep it

Trigger Antwerp, Belgium
fomu.be/trigger/articles/cute-girl-sexy-uniform-trendy-music-sound-dance-yay-war Social media is now framing our lives – people convey information through images and videos much more than ever. We can't help asking if it means that all netizens are to some extent 'photographers?' If so, what are the challenges and risks for not only ourselves but also societies? Is the mechanism of social media reinforcing the negative sides or abusing the subordinated groups more? In our latest article 'cute girl + sexy uniform + trendy music /sound + dance = yay! war!' written by Alia Leonardi (@liaouioui), she examines the influence of social media and 'unframes' the boundary of photography. In the era of the injustice war happening in the world, information is rapidly spread via social media. But how do people process the information of wars? With insightful analysis, Leonardi unpacks the intolerably prevalent phenomenon that women are sexualized and objectified in war zones.
