

ALPER CEKINMEZ

I don't belong anywhere, then I should go somewhere that doesn't exist.

I am bothered by injustice in society. I have a desire for utopia, something perfect, something that doesn't exist. The perfection I look for is not in the material qualities but in the spirit. Like divine truth. As unachievable as nothingness is, I attempt it through my artistry. While the machines are practical experiments on different parts of my research on existence; the thought provoking humor, born from the absurdity of attempting impossible spiritual concepts through machinery, is what makes my work poetic. It is a never ending performance.
